

INTERDISCIPLINARY AORTIC DISSECTION SYMPOSIUM

ABOUT

The Interdisciplinary Aortic Dissection Symposium (IADS) brings together global leaders to share the latest evidence, insights and best practice in the management of aortic dissection.

Through interdisciplinary collaboration, IADS aims to advance clinical practice, encourage evidence-based care and ultimately improve outcomes for patients.

For 2027, IADS moves to a new two-day format at King's College London, welcoming approximately 200 delegates. The programme will begin mid-morning on Day 1 and conclude mid-afternoon on Day 2, creating a focused and engaging two-day meeting.

FACULTY

A world-leading international faculty is at the heart of IADS.

Previous programmes have brought together renowned experts from the UK and across the world, combining specialist presentations, case discussions, debates and interactive sessions.

This will continue in 2027, with leading clinicians and researchers coming together to share expertise and discuss the future of aortic dissection care.

PROGRAMME CHAIR - Professor Bijan Modarai

Professor of Vascular Surgery, King's College London & Guy's & St Thomas' NHS Foundation Trust

Professor Bijan Modarai is the Founder and Programme Chair of IADS and an internationally recognised vascular and endovascular surgeon.

His clinical and research work focuses on complex aortic disease and developing new approaches to the diagnosis and treatment of vascular conditions. He leads the development of the IADS programme and its internationally renowned faculty.
